

The Constitution

The Constitution of the United States was written in 1787. The men who wrote it wanted to set up a strong government for the country. Some of the men who wrote the Constitution are James Madison and Benjamin Franklin. The Constitution set up for three parts of government (called branches) that we still have today. The Constitution lists the key rights for American citizens. The basic laws of the U.S. are found in this written statement.

